Key questions in the consultation

- Have we identified the key issues which will enable Wales to be a country of learning and therefore a successful nation?
- What are the priority areas for action?
- What balance should we strike between the various possible actions; for instance, should we prioritise at least in the short to medium term, to higher level skills essential to Wales' economic competitiveness over tackling the needs of the socially disadvantaged who lack essential skills? Or should the emphasis be the other way round?
- In particular, what should be the priority areas for public investment, and what balance should be struck between the contributions of the public purse and those of private businesses, the voluntary sector, communities and individuals?
- Are we sufficiently clear about the individual and collective contributions of the National Council - ELWa and other public bodies?
