"We believe, after extended consideration of the evidence presented to this committee, that the Orders in Council proposals amount to concealed primary legislative powers. While we say nothing about the desirability or otherwise of primary powers, we believe that it is disingenuous to pretend that this development of the Assembly's powers does not amount to a change in the principle and scope of Welsh devolution. Such a change requires the endorsement of the people of Wales in a referendum. We therefore call for a referendum on the principle of the Assembly receiving primary law making powers."

2.18 Paragraff 113: Cynigiwyd gwelliant gan Kirsty Williams

Drafftiwyd y paragraff fel a ganlyn:

The Secretary of State for Wales must, under section 31 of the 1998 Act, consult with the Assembly about the United Kingdom Government's legislative programme. Part of this consultation must include participating in proceedings at least annually. Under section 76 of the 1998 Act, the Secretary of State may attend any Plenary proceedings, and is entitled to receive certain documents. There are no such provisions in the Scotland Act, and they would certainly be provisions which would be inappropriate at Stage 3. However, as the balance between Westminster and Cardiff is readjusted, it might be sensible for these provisions to be repealed in the forthcoming Wales Bill. This does not mean that there would be any fewer contacts between the Wales Office and the Welsh Assembly Government, and we would hope that the Secretary of State and other United Kingdom Ministers would be willing from time to time to give evidence to Assembly committees. We recommend that the Secretary of State's obligation to consult the Assembly on the United Kingdom Government's legislative programme be removed, and the right to attend Plenary proceedings be repealed also.
