4 May 2022

Dear George,

I was extremely disappointed with the announcement by the UK Government on 28 April of yet another delay to the introduction of border checks and personal imports restrictions for EU imports, due to commence in July.

This repeated lack of engagement by the UK Government, is completely contrary to the ways of working envisaged in the Inter-Governmental Relations Review and the Common Frameworks and is incredibly disrespectful to our responsibilities as a Devolved Government and to devolution itself. This also undermines our work together, over many years, through the Inter-Ministerial Group (IMG).

I note my colleague, Vaughan Gething, MS, Minister for Economy, wrote to you on 24 March regarding Defra's plans for the implementation of further sanitary and phytosanitary (SPS) controls on imports from July-November 2022 to which you not yet responded.

I am sure you agree with me maintaining robust biosecurity is a critically important. When we were Members of the EU, we applied higher levels of assurance on EU imports where permitted. Our exit from the EU does not mean our biosecurity should decrease in any way. The UK Government's recent announcement has caused continued uncertainty about the level and type of checks for which Devolved Governments and industry will need to plan.

Continued delays to the introduction of EU import checks are a risk to our collective biosecurity, a risk which grows with time. The lack of access to EU traceability, disease notification and emergency response systems further compounds this risk.

I am very concerned the farming sector in Wales will be disadvantaged and there will not be a level playing field for Welsh producers, who are subject to costly and time-consuming EU export checks and regulatory requirements, whilst their EU competitors continue to benefit from the lack of any such regulatory checks.

We welcome receiving correspondence in Welsh. Any correspondence received in Welsh will be answered in Welsh and corresponding in Welsh will not lead to a delay in responding.

I also share concerns voiced by the British Veterinary Association in relation to risks of incursion of exotic diseases to this country. I am very worried by diseases such as foot and mouth disease, african swine fever or indeed rabies, all of which can have a devastating impact.

There is general consensus between the Chief Veterinary Officers and Chief Plant Health Officers these are biosecurity risks we should be collectively addressing to consider how to protect animal and plant health on a GB-wide basis.

There is a foundation of good collaboration between all UK governments through the IMG, Common UK Animal Health and Welfare Framework and the Common UK Plant Health Framework. This is where we maintain common policies and approaches to ensure protection of the UK's biosecurity status and to facilitate trade within and beyond the UK on SPS goods.

Given the uncertainty following the UK Government's announcement, we need our officials to urgently work together to collectively agree a risk-based approach to managing biosecurity risks and take policy decisions on public, animal and plant health issues affecting the UK as a whole,

My preference is to have a GB-wide approach to import checks. However; as I have stated before, I do not exclude taking a Wales-only approach even if this means setting up a higher standard than England. Unless we are properly involved in determining the future approach, we may have no option but to develop a regime of our own, in order to protect devolved matters including animal and plant health.

I am copying this letter to Vaughan Gething MS, Minister for the Economy, Mairi Gougeon MSP, Cabinet Secretary for Rural Affairs and Islands, and Simon Hart MP, Secretary of State for Wales.

Yours sincerely,

10 May 2022

Dear Jacob

Thank you for your letter of 28 April, which reaffirmed the UK Government's decision to further delay the introduction of customs checks and SPS checks on the importation of goods from the EU.

I will repeat here the point I made at GB(O) on 27 April regarding the importance of adhering to the ways of working envisaged in the Inter-Governmental Relations Review and the Common Frameworks.

The Welsh Government now needs to consider the full implications of your announcement and its impact for Wales. We also need to understand the UK Government's detailed proposals on how to treat goods from the island of Ireland. I hope you will endorse the need for Welsh Ministers to be fully involved in GB(O) discussions on import controls in relation to the Irish Sea ports and can help ensure that we are participate in the appropriate discussion in order to agree a collective way forward. Not being able to do so would hinder a coherent approach for Britain and the choices we will need to consider in the exercise of our devolved responsibilities.

No one can argue with your wish to deploy technology to make our borders more efficient and support trade with our nearest neighbours, provided we have confidence that it is robust and resilient. If a safe, secure and efficient import system can be achieved through harnessing innovative new technologies to streamline processes and reduce frictions, then this is something the Welsh Government can support.

But equally we will want to be assured that our long-term strategic responsibilities to protect the health of people, animals and plants in this country are given sufficient weight. We know the dreadful consequences of an outbreak of animal or plant disease. I am less than confident that technology can yet address these concerns.

We welcome receiving correspondence in Welsh. Any correspondence received in Welsh will be answered in Welsh and corresponding in Welsh will not lead to a delay in responding.

I'm sure you would agree that we should limit risk to biosecurity and food safety, while securing the food supply chain and trade. We enjoy the natural advantage of a sea border around the island of Great Britain, so we are able to limit the impact of diseases, such as foot and mouth and rabies.

Although biosecurity is devolved, we need a coherent approach for imports into Great Britain, given there are no hard borders between our countries. My colleague Lesley Griffiths has already written to George Eustice to propose that we should invite the Chief Veterinary Officers and experts on high-risk plants, to advise Ministers collectively on how to minimise these risks. I emphasise that we need to work better together going forward if we are to devise a joined up approach that we can all recommend to our respective governments.

My other immediate concern is the legislative requirement. We need legislation to come into force before the end of June to put off SPS checks. As Lesley Griffiths set out at IMG as far back as 21 March, and I reiterated in my letter to George Eustice a few days later, we urgently need to see DEFRA's legislation so we can plan how to legislate in concert with you. It may be possible for the legislation you are making to apply on an England and Wales basis but, depending on its exact content, we may have to mirror your legislation in parallel Welsh legislation. Until we see the text of your proposed legislation, we won't be able to make that legal determination. The time to legislate is now very short indeed, we risk running out of time to make the required Welsh legislation before July unless Defra can confirm the position within the next few weeks. All this is potentially affected by your intentions for trade with the island of Ireland, so I look forward to next week's GB(O) discussions.

Finally, I have been clear that any expenditure on border controls following exit from the European Union should be funded by the UK Treasury. If anything, this new announcement adds to our argument. UK Government decisions have determined the form of our departure from the European Union, and UK Government decisions continue to directly affect devolved responsibilities with cost consequences. I would be grateful for assurances that this latest policy shift will not affect the UK Government's existing commitment to fund the building costs for any necessary border controls in Wales.

I am copying this letter to my colleagues, Lesley Griffiths MS, Minister for Rural Affairs, North Wales and Trefnydd, to Mairi Gougeon MSP, Cabinet Secretary for Rural Affairs and Islands in the Scottish Government and to the Rt. Hon George Eustice MP, Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, Rt. Hon Michael Ellis QC MP, Minister for the Cabinet Office and the Rt. Hon Simon Hart MP, Secretary of State for Wales.

Yn ddiweddar, cynhaliodd Pwyllgor Economi, Masnach a Materion Gwledig y Senedd ymchwiliad byr i'r prinder gyrwyr cerbydau nwyddau trwm a'r materion cysylltiedig o ran y gadwyn gyflenwi. Yn ystod dadl ar adroddiad y Pwyllgor, mynegodd Llywodraeth Cymru ei siom mai dim ond Lloegr fydd yn cael y £32.5 miliwn o gyllid newydd i wella cyfleusterau parcio lorïau, a honnodd fod cyfleusterau wrth ymyl y ffordd i yrwyr (safleoedd gorffwys, hynny yw) yn fater a gadwyd yn ôl. Ers hynny, rwyf wedi gohebu â Llywodraeth Cymru, sydd wedi cynnig ambell eglurhad.

Rwy'n awyddus, fodd bynnag, i ddeall barn Llywodraeth y DU ar y mater. A ydych chi o'r farn bod cyfleusterau wrth ymyl y ffordd ar gyfer gyrwyr cerbydau nwyddau trwm – gan gynnwys safleoedd gorffwys – yn fater a gadwyd yn ôl, neu sydd wedi'i ddatganoli i'r Senedd? Hoffwn gael gwybod beth yw sail statudol eich safbwynt.

At hynny, rwyf wedi cynnwys copi o'r adroddiad ar brinder gyrwyr cerbydau nwyddau trwm, a'r materion cysylltiedig o ran y gadwyn gyflenwi. Er i'r Ymchwiliad ystyried y pwnc trwy lens Gymreig, mae llawer o'r materion a drafodwyd gennym yn ymwneud â'r DU gyfan, felly roeddwn i'n meddwl efallai y byddai o ddiddordeb i chi.

Rheoliadau Pysgodfeydd Môr (Diwygio) 2022

Mae'r rheoliadau a enwir uchod ("Rheoliadau 2022") yn ymwneud â mesurau sy'n gymwys i bysgodfa draenogod môr sy'n ymestyn y tu hwnt i Barth Cymru. Er mwyn iddynt fod yn effeithiol, mae angen iddynt fod yn berthnasol i'r DU gyfan ac i bob cwch sy'n gweithredu yn nyfroedd y DU. Yn benodol, mae Rheoliadau 2022 yn diwygio symiau'r draenogod môr y gellir eu cadw fel sgil-ddalfa wrth weithredu offer pysgota sy'n cael eu defnyddio i dargedu rhywogaethau eraill. Bydd y mesurau'n ymestyn y broses o osgoi gwaredu draenogod môr yn wastraffus.

Cytunwyd ar y mesurau hyn gyda'r Comisiwn Ewropeaidd yn ystod yr ymgynghoriadau ar gyfleoedd pysgota a rennir ar gyfer 2022 a ddaeth i ben ym mis Rhagfyr 2021.

Rwyf wedi rhoi fy nghaniatâd i'r Ysgrifennydd Gwladol dros yr Amgylchedd, Bwyd a Materion Gwledig wneud Rheoliadau 2022, felly mae'r darpariaethau ynddo yn gymwys yng Nghymru. Gosodwyd Rheoliadau 2022 gerbron y Senedd ar 29 Ebrill ac mae'r Offeryn Statudol yn ddarostyngedig i'r weithdrefn negyddol.

Pan fydd angen cynnal fframweithiau pysgodfeydd rheoleiddiol ledled y DU, mae'n briodol fy mod yn cydsynio i Lywodraeth y DU ddeddfu ar ein rhan ar bysgodfa draenogod môr sy'n cael ei rhannu â Gweinyddiaethau eraill yn y DU.

Economy, Trade and Rural Affairs Committee inquiry into the cost-of-living crisis

The Bevan Foundation is Wales' most influential think-tank. We aim to end poverty and inequality by working with people to find effective solutions and by inspiring governments, organisations and communities to take action. We are grateful for the opportunity to submit written evidence to the Economy, Trade and Rural Affairs Committee's inquiry into the cost-of-living crisis. Our extensive work on poverty and inequality provides us with some insights into the difficulties caused by rising costs. Our response draws on this experience, and addresses each of the questions set out in the consultation document in turn.

Summary of key points:

- Whilst the cost-of-living crisis is affecting everyone in Wales, it is low-income households that are the hardest hit. Low-income households are far more likely to have to cut back on essentials or fall into debt because of rising costs than middle and high income households.
- In November 2021, 39 per cent of Welsh households reported that they struggled to afford anything beyond essential items. This is likely to have increased over recent months. A significant proportion of the Welsh population are therefore likely to have minimal discretionary spending over the coming months. This will have an impact on sectors such as tourism, hospitality and entertainment, sectors that were hit especially hard by the pandemic
- Rural households are likely to be more negatively affected by rising costs than urban households.
- The actions taken by the UK Government in response to the crisis have been grossly inadequate and are failing to protect those who are most likely to be affected by rising costs.
- The response of the Welsh Government has demonstrated a greater understanding of the scale of the challenge facing Welsh households. There is further action that could be taken however, to provide greater support to households and to improve delivery.

What are the likely economic impacts of the cost-of-living crunch?

The cost-of-living crunch is likely to have a negative effect on the Welsh economy. The Bank of England's latest forecast projects that the UK economy will shrink in the final quarter of 2022.<sup>1</sup> This is projected to be a direct result of high inflation, with households having less money to spend on non-essential items.<sup>2</sup> It is likely that the Welsh economy is already feeling the impact of rising costs restricting household spending.

Since December 2020 the Bevan Foundation has commissioned three polls from YouGov as part of its "snapshot of poverty" series. Our most recent poll, undertaken in November 2021 found that 39 per cent of Welsh households did not have enough money to buy anything beyond essential items.<sup>3</sup> This marked a significant deterioration from the position in May 2021 when 33 per cent of households reported that they did not have enough money to spend on anything other than essentials.<sup>4</sup>

More recent increases in living costs are likely to have seen the position of many Welsh households deteriorate further. A significant proportion of the Welsh population are therefore likely to have minimal discretionary spending over the coming months. This will have an impact on sectors such as tourism, hospitality and entertainment, sectors that were hit especially hard by the pandemic. In turn, this could have an impact on unemployment, with the Bank of England forecasting that unemployment will increase past 5 per cent over the coming months.<sup>5</sup>

Even businesses that provide essential services are likely to feel the impact of the cost-of-living crunch over the coming months. In November 2021, a staggering 165,000 Welsh households either sometimes or always struggled to afford all their essentials.<sup>6</sup> Households trapped in such a position face an impossible choice, cut back on essentials, borrow money, or fall into arrears on a bill. Businesses are therefore likely to have to manage higher rates of arrears and debt from their customers.

More importantly than the impact on business, however, is the impact of such pressures on the thousands of Welsh households that are struggling to afford all the essentials they require. Over recent months the Bevan Foundation have been working in partnership with Action in Caerau and Ely to understand people's lived experience of poverty. Through this work we have heard first-hand about the difficult decisions Welsh households are having to make on a daily basis as a result of rising costs. The insights shared by Action and Caerau and Ely in response to this committee's inquiry captures vividly the real-life impact of these pressures.

How are cost of living pressures affecting the workforce, and how are different groups within the workforce being affected?

For thousands of people across Wales, being in work was no guarantee of good quality living standards long before the more recent pressure on costs. In 2017/18 to 2019/20 250,000 adults and 140,000 children were living in poverty in households where at least one adult was in work.<sup>7</sup> Of these, 120,000 adults and 70,000 children were living in poverty where all adults living in the household were in work.<sup>8</sup>

Low pay, irregular working hours and unfair terms and conditions are all factors that have contributed to high numbers of people living in poverty despite being in work. When these factors combine with an inadequate social security system and high housing and childcare costs, it is little wonder that so many households were already finding life difficult. It is these workers that are being hardest hit by cost-of-living pressures.

There is a body of evidence that demonstrates that workers in low-income households are being harder hit by rising costs than workers in high-income households. For example, the Bevan Foundation's most recent Snapshot of poverty report showed that lower income households were more likely to cut back on essentials and were more likely to have fallen into debt in November 2021 than higher income households.<sup>9</sup>

Low-income households spend a higher proportion of their household expenditure on essential items such as food and fuel.<sup>10</sup> As a result, when costs rise low-income households have far less wiggle room within their budget, forcing households to cut back or fall into debt. Given that there were 250,000 working age adults living in poverty in working households even before the current crisis, it is clear that the number of workers that are set to be pushed into real hardship will be significant.

Not only are low-paid workers more likely to be directly affected by increases in costs, but they could also be at greater risk of the broader economic effects of the crisis. As set out in our response to question 1, increasing costs are likely to lead to people cutting back on discretionary spending as they try and ensure they have enough money to spend on essentials. This in turn is likely to have an impact on unemployment rates.

Some of the sectors that are most likely to be negatively affected by households cutting back on non-essential spending are sectors that were shut completely during Covid-19 lockdowns. The sectors that were locked down, were, by default, providing non-essential services and goods. The fact that low paid workers were more likely to work in locked down sectors therefore raises the concern that low paid workers could bear the brunt of any increase in unemployment.<sup>11</sup>

It is not just low-income workers that are likely to be more negatively affected by rising living costs. Households with children, disabled people and minority ethnic groups are all likely to be more significantly affected by rising costs than the general workforce.<sup>12</sup> This is in part the result of such households being more likely to live in poverty prior to the current crisis.

How are cost of living challenges impacting upon businesses and economic sectors, and how are businesses responding to these?

As set out in response to the previous two questions cost of living challenges are set to have a significant impact on Welsh businesses. Rising costs are already squeezing household incomes, meaning that households have less disposable income. This is likely to have a negative effect on sectors such as hospitality and tourism as households reduce their spending on non-essential items. Even those businesses that offer essential services are likely to be affected, with more and more households set to fall behind on their bills as they try and make ends meet.

The challenge facing businesses are compounded by the fact that the same factors that are affecting consumer behaviour is also affecting the ability of businesses to respond to changing demand. Rising food and energy costs, for example, are already eating into the margins of many restaurants. Dropping prices to entice more customers is therefore unlikely to be a viable option for many.

How are rural communities being affected by the cost-of-living crunch, and to what extent are the pressures they face different to urban areas?

Rural communities are likely to be more severely affected by the cost-of-living crunch than urban communities. There are two primary reasons why rural communities are likely to be more severely affected.

First, household expenditure is higher in rural areas than in urban areas. The average rural household at GB level spends £641.10 per week on essentials compared with £572.90 for the average urban household.<sup>13</sup> Rural households therefore have less room within their budgets to manage any increases in living costs, with this being especially true for low-income households in rural areas.

A second reason why rural households are more likely to be negatively affected by rising living costs is that public services and charitable support are harder to access in rural areas. The difficulty in accessing public services is one reason why rural households face higher living costs than urban households. A lack of public transport, for example, means that rural households are more reliant on private vehicles. As a result, the average rural household spends £105 per week on transport compared to £76.40 a week for the average urban household.<sup>14</sup> It is also likely to mean, that emergency support, such as that provided by foodbanks will be harder to access in rural areas, with people having to travel to local towns or larger villages to access support. Low-income households living in rural areas could therefore face a double challenge as they seek to manage rising living costs.

How effective are the support measures that the Welsh and UK governments have put in place, and what further support might be needed over the coming months?

The measures put in place by the UK Government to manage the cost-of-living crisis have been grossly inadequate. To date the UK Government has taken very little action to provide targeted support to low-income households, the households that will be most seriously affected by rising costs. Action such as increasing benefits in line with inflation and ending the freeze on the Local Housing Allowance will put more money in the pockets of the households that need it the most, reducing the risk of households having to choose between heating and eating. Such measures would not only benefit people that are out of work but will also benefit many workers that are in low paid roles.

The response of the Welsh Government has demonstrated a greater understanding of the scale of the challenge facing Welsh households. Analysis undertaken by Wales Fiscal Analysis at Cardiff University shows that the nearly £340m package of measures announced by the Welsh Government in February 2022 to support families is significantly more generous than the measures taken in other parts of the UK.<sup>15</sup> There is no doubt that measures such as the creation of the Winter Fuel Support

Payment and extending the provision of support in lieu of Free School Meals until the end of the summer will make a significant difference. There are further steps that could be taken, however, to further ease the pressure faced by Welsh households.

In February 2022 the Bevan Foundation published its Welsh action plan for responding to the cost-of-living crisis.<sup>16</sup> We are pleased that a number of the recommendations made by the Bevan Foundation have since been taken forward by the Welsh Government. Some of our recommendations are still to be actioned, however. Perhaps the most significant of these was our recommendation for the Welsh Government to top up local authorities' Discretionary Housing Payments allocations to the maximum permitted in 2022/23.<sup>17</sup> Doing so could significantly boost the ability of local authorities to provide additional support to households struggling with rising living costs.

Just as important as increasing the level of support that is available to Welsh households is improving the way that support is delivered. Even before the pandemic the Welsh Government and Welsh local authorities provided significant levels of means-tested support to people on low incomes. From Free School Meals to the Council Tax Reduction Scheme to the Discretionary Assistance Fund, these grants and allowances acted as a vital additional lifeline to Welsh families. In 2019 there were 12 different grants and allowances that provided support to low-income families.<sup>18</sup> Each of these were administered separately. This meant that eligibility criteria could differ, or even where the eligibility criteria were identical, people were still having to submit multiple applications to access all the support they were entitled to. As a result, thousands of people across Wales were missing out on support they were entitled to.<sup>19</sup>

The extra schemes introduced by the Welsh Government in response to the pandemic and the cost-of-living crisis has exacerbated this challenge. As a result, a low-income family with two children aged 2 and 7 could potentially have to submit six different application forms to access all the support they are entitled to from the Welsh Government and Welsh local authorities. This could grow to eight if they need to access further discretionary support through the Discretionary Assistance Fund or Discretionary Housing Payments. This complicated process is likely to explain, at least in part, why fewer than half of eligible households had made an application for the Winter Fuel Scheme as of February 9th.<sup>20</sup>

Pulling these grants and allowances together into a coherent Welsh Benefits system could provide an opportunity to address these challenges. Doing so would provide an opportunity to improve the support provided by each scheme and allow people to apply for all the support they are entitled to in one place. This could boost take-up, putting money into the pockets of families that need it the most. It could also ease some of the pressures faced by local authorities, freeing staff to work to promote benefits, rather than processing multiple application forms from the same households

About FSB Wales

FSB Wales is the authoritative voice of businesses in Wales. It campaigns for a better social, political, and economic environment in which to work and do business.

With a strong grassroots structure, a Wales Policy Unit and dedicated Welsh staff to deal with Welsh institutions, media and politicians, FSB Wales makes its members' voices heard at the heart of the decision-making process.

FSB Wales welcomes the opportunity to respond on the current cost of living crisis, and would urge that the committee take into account that a cost of living crisis is also a cost of business crisis. Given that many SMEs remain vulnerable following the Covid-19 pandemic, it is vital that we develop an economic strategic vision and ensure that all governments ensure that a post-Covid recovery is not thwarted at this critical time.

- What are the likely economic impacts of the cost of living crunch?
- How are cost of living challenges impacting upon businesses and economic sectors, and how are businesses responding to these?

SMEs form the overwhelming bulk of businesses in Wales. They are grounded and embedded in our communities and provide vital services and amenities, as well as jobs and prosperity. They form the foundation for local economic development and create value within our communities. It is vital that policy is shaped to respond to the current challenges in a way that places them at the centre of economic development.

April was a particularly difficult month for small businesses, as a host of costs kicked in:

- 100% business rates relief for retail, leisure and hospitality has been reduced to 50%
- VAT has increased from reduced rate of 12.5% to 20%
- Increase in the National Minimum Wage
- National Insurance contributions for employers have risen by 1.5%
- Soaring energy and fuel prices – with another rise expected in October
- Ongoing supply chain issues because of Brexit, the pandemic, and war in Ukraine

Cost of living is holding back growth, with a 0.1% GDP increase for February presenting a challenging economic horizon, particularly with inflation and rising costs. Rising inflation has left small businesses with little option but to increase prices: the rising cost of living starts with a cost of doing business crisis, and so it is imperative to take all measures to address the financial barriers of doing business and support our SMEs.

Many small businesses rely on discretionary spending. If households have constrained income, it will be these businesses that are likely to suffer first and may be less able to pass the price increases on. The cost of doing business is rising, which in turn will continue to have an impact on the cost of living.

While this restraint in spending will be felt across the economy, some sectors which were most impacted by the pandemic such as hospitality and retail may be particularly exposed in the months ahead.

Our research suggests increased fuel costs add over £1,000 per year onto SME's energy bills, with some sectors facing far higher bills.

For a typical commercial van, the increase is approximately £1139, with an average of 2648 litres of fuel used annually, at currently an additional £0.43 cost per litre.

SMEs have faced an average gas bill hike of more than 250 per cent in the last year with gas prices paid by some in the first three months of 2022 soaring by this amount when compared with the same period in 2021.<sup>1</sup> However, unlike domestic customers, firms have yet to see any dedicated Government support and with insecure contracts, the unstable energy market is also seeing suppliers withdraw tariff propositions at short notice.

Our latest Small Business Index suggests 80.4% of small businesses in Wales reported increased costs over this last quarter. This is likely to have an instant impact on small businesses, who may now see new and immediate salary expectations rising, along with inflation. This is a cost that will ultimately be passed on to consumers.

FSB are calling for banks to be supportive towards small businesses during this testing period, as the access to finance is likely to continue to be squeezed.

National Insurance is set to add to the costs of the 55,385 SMEs affected in Wales by £173m (at a median cost of £3,115 per business), as can be seen in the table below:

	Number of SMEs with employees	Total Employers NICs cost increase	Total Employers NICs cost increase, £m

Businesses remain in a vulnerable position after the Covid-19 pandemic. In February, corporate insolvencies in England and Wales more than doubled over the past year (+121%). Businesses are struggling already, and any recovery will require a resilient small business sector to be able to weather the continuing storms from the cost-of-living crisis as outlined.

- How are cost of living pressures affecting the workforce, and how are different groups within the workforce being affected?

Clearly, cost of living pressures will impact on the standard of living of the workforce, small business owners and the self-employed.

The trauma of Covid-19 will likely have a continued impact on mental health. FSB's recent survey of 1,000 business owners finds that a third (34%) of all small business owners state that their mental health declined over the course of the pandemic. Latest Government figures show that there are 5.5 million small businesses across the UK, indicating that 1,800,000 have suffered a mental wellbeing hit due to Covid. Across all respondents, one in four (24%) report that they currently have a mental health condition such as anxiety, depression or post-traumatic stress. Among disabled entrepreneurs, the figure rises to four in ten (43%).

As such, following two years of accumulating debt, care responsibilities for staff, as well as personal pressure, cost of living will add to mental health vulnerabilities and to these pressures.

The rise in cost of living will understandably lead to rising pressures on wages, with SMEs being in a difficult position of financial insecurity following the pandemic and disruption to business, and where SMEs are already reporting a rising cost of labour and skills shortages.

Our 'What we Value' report notes the leadership and pastoral care SME owners have, and the close relationships they have with their staff. They will feel responsibility to help where they can, but SMEs may themselves need support to weather the current storms themselves.

Where SMEs struggle on wages, they tend to look to provide better and more flexible terms and conditions and we will continue to encourage exploring such options as well as flexible or remote working where that may save money also and where they fit the company.

- How are rural communities being affected by the cost of living crunch, and to what extent are the pressures they face different to urban areas?

Rural areas already face greater costs in terms of fuel costs, and so the impact will be felt disproportionate in these areas.

Less disposable income could have an impact on the drive toward better local food systems, with advice to 'buy value brands' for example being at the expense and against a strategy to point to the value of quality local products. It also raises the costs of bringing perishable products to market and in terms of export.

Rural areas in Wales are more dependent on tourism and so less disposable income is likely to lead to issues in terms of the amount visitors can spend locally and fewer holidays taken. It is also likely to force business to raise prices for their services, pushing this into a vicious economic cycle whereby business costs go up, leading to pressures to raise prices, potentially leading to fewer visitors leading to less revenue.

We know that rural and coastal town high streets are already vulnerable due to factors outlined in our recent report 'A Vision for Welsh Towns'. With less 'strength in depth' of economic activity, low retail and hospitality spending may well have a disproportionate effect on these economies and Welsh and UK governments will need to look to measures to maintain the viability of operating businesses within these settings and supporting Welsh high streets.

It's also the case that where businesses may look to adapt to lower costs that this may be more difficult in rural areas. For example, there would be less by way of EV charging points if this was a way to lower costs either in personal car use, or in terms of freight and deliveries. Broadband and 5G infrastructure may make it more difficult to lower travel costs through tools such as remote working for example.

The discussions around mitigations for rural areas are therefore linked to infrastructure and economic development strategy that places value on rurality, on local supply systems and in terms of ensuring a level playing field for SMEs whatever their location in Wales.

- How effective are the support measures that the Welsh and UK governments have put in place, and what further support might be needed over the coming months?

FSB have encouraged firms to check what support is out there, such as the Employment Allowance, and to also check with local authorities where there may be unspent funds available. We would encourage local, Welsh and UK governments to proactively seek to provide support, ensuring information is widely disseminated or that support is provided automatically where possible.

We are calling for banks to be supportive towards small businesses during this testing period and would urge governments to apply pressure to ensure this too.

During the Spring Statement, FSB were pleased to see our calls for an increase in the Employment Allowance – a tax cut worth up to £1,000 for eligible businesses and a measure for which FSB campaigned, was included by the Chancellor. This measure, along with the fuel duty cut, may help some SMEs keep their head above the water.

While we are pleased the Chancellor is listening to our calls, government must go further to support small businesses with soaring energy costs. The rising energy costs are concerning, and while government was right to focus on domestic consumers, actions to support small businesses also need to be taken, otherwise we will start seeing the serious impact of the cost of doing business.

Any remaining funding, allocated by Welsh Government to be utilised in reaction to supporting businesses through earlier phases of the pandemic, should be reconsidered for redeployment within the context of the energy price crisis. It may yet be the case that Welsh and UK Governments will need to come up with further targeted support to help cushion the blow of higher costs for businesses to ensure that we don't stifle the recovery.

The business rates holiday in Wales was extremely helpful to our members in 2020-21 and 2021-22, and we welcome the continued relief of 50% this year for SMEs. However, this policy was put in place ahead of the Omicron crisis, prior to the worst rises in inflation, fuel and energy costs, and ahead of the impact from the war in Ukraine. As such we would urge Welsh Government to revisit whether there is a means to lower the cost of business.

In general, we would urge governments to lower the cost of doing business where possible, and to ensure we secure the SME sector as the foundation to our economy and communities in Wales. Where possible, the support on cost of living to individuals should also apply to small businesses, to continue to mitigate the pressures to raise costs.
